Old Longfellow Home.

The three story frame building at the corner of Fore and Hancock streets in which Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was born, was dedicated Thursday, Oct. 29, under the auspices of the International Longfellow Society as an international memorial for the poet.

Since the purchase of the building by the Society, it has been thoroughly renovated and placed in a nearly as good condition as its original condition. All the partitions, which changed it into a tenement house, have been removed and much of the Colonial appearance has been restored. Many handsome and interesting belongings of the place during the year it was occupied by the poet's family before they moved to the Congress street home have been secured for the buildings.

Dressing Children's Hair An Art.

Hair dressing for the little girl becomes an art. Tightly plastered locks and starched pigtales belong to the child of the past. Miss Up-to-Date, with clean complexion and rosy cheeks, has her face set in the softest frame of fluffy tresses and her mother has no small task to keep them light and glossy.

In the first place, the care of the hair itself has developed into a duty of no small magnitude. When a child's scalp is healthy the hair should be washed once a week with pure castile soap and lukewarm water. This gives it the loose, fluffy effect that is so essential.

The best is to shave a small piece of the soap into very hot water and allow it to become thoroughly dissolved. Temper the water gradually until it does not burn the scalp and then wash the hair with the back wrist. Then with the aid of a nail brush, which is kept expressly for the purpose, it is only a matter of five or ten minutes' work for a mother to cleanse the scalp and hair.

Whatever the age of the child, this simple shampoo is most effective. Care should be taken, however, that the hair should be thoroughly dried, using plenty of dry towels and fanning vigorously at the end. To prevent and danger of colds many mothers wash a child's head just before putting her to bed.

Should the scalp show dry signs of dandruff or if it is naturally dry a reliable tonic should be applied regularly and the weekly shampoo continued as above. Borax or ammonia should be diligently avoided in these frequent washings if the hair is to be permitted to grow long and luxuriant, as they dry out all natural secretions.

As patent as this shampooing process may seem, it is unquestionably the secret of the extremely pretty hair of the little girl of today, and lays the foundation for beautiful locks in tresses when she grows to womanhood.

In the matter of daily dressing of the hair, mothers have no end of little girl coiffures from which to choose. For the child with perfectly straight locks the Russian style, cut short and bobbing around the ears and neck, has long been a general favorite. Practicable and comfortable as it unquestionably is, the objection to it is the extreme boyish look which it gives.

The latter is relieved somewhat by a slight pompadour, effected by parting the hair on either side of the head at the front and trying the intervening locks to the left of the head. Or for the very young child the hair parted on a perfectly straight line with the nose.

Several strands on either side of the fore head are caught each in a small bow of soft ribbon. This style of hair dressing is becoming only to a child with rather a low brow.

The particular charm in either of these rather severe styles lies in the freshness and brightness of the bow or bows that set them off. The modern little girl has to have hair ribbons galore and the only means by which they can be preserved with any kind of smoothness.

Even then they must be folded over the fingers every time they are taken off and the same ribbon should not be used as an offender than twice a week. With constant handling a ribbon loses its dressing very quickly.

Unless a child's hair has a wiry straightness many mothers prefer that it should be tied or braided loosely and then pulled out in soft, fluffy curves around the face.

For the little girl who is blessed with curly locks this coiffure is a very simple matter, as the hair falls naturally into graceful lines. The smartest way of fastening the locks in place, is with a huge bow at the side of the face, if the child is very small, while a larger girl has the back locks held together at the nape of the neck by a silver clasp. This winds in and out among the hair and holds it tightly in place so that stray ends cannot work out easily and fly in untidy fashion in front of the eyes.

The child with a very high forehead should have it concealed by bangs, which are again returning to favor. They are cut with a horseshoe curve that slopes up on either side. If the bangs are short the hair behind the forehead is pulled flat look on top of the head. If the head has quite a decided bump on top the part is made well back, thus effecting a very long bang.

A last and important point about children's hair is that the very short locks at the side of the ears should be trained to grow up. If a mother is troubled with their fringing down on the cheek they should be soaped in place each night. In a few months' time they will stay in place of themselves.

Her First Experience at a Fair.

One often hears of interesting happenings at a fair, some of them thrilling and exciting while others are of a tamer nature. The one to be narrated was commenced in a small way but before its finish proved to be rather annoying to the parties concerned.

The subjects of the story were two young ladies, a young man and a man of middle age. The two young ladies and young man, all neatly dressed and bearing the marks of refinement, were watching the antics of one of the fakirs when a man of middle age came along beside of them, feeling a little over-happy and unable to guide his steps.

The young lady in blue silk turned to her friend remarking, "Say, I'll stump you to go and take that man be the arm and walk down the mid-way with him."

No sooner said than she was on her way. Hurrying up to the tottering man she clutched him by the arm, saying, "Come, take a walk with me." Delighted at the idea he straightened up a little and they merrily jogged along for about ten feet.

Those in the vicinity were eagerly watching to see the outcome, while the other two in her party were convulsed with laughter at such a huge joke when suddenly the young lady, jerking away from her newly acquired tottering acquaintance, said, "There I have walked far enough," and ran back to her laughing companions.

The old man was of a different opinion and as fast as he could, back he came to the young lady, making desperate grabs for her and seizing her arm for another walk. The situation was changing and it was not as much of a joke as it had been.

She tried to get away from him but was unable, till the man in the party stepped between them, receiving the blow instead of the young lady and on the quiet told her to get out into the crowd, and while he detained the enraged man she was out of sight, lost in the crowd.

After a few minutes the tottering man showed signs of fight and his situation was becoming still more complicated. For him to escape now was a harder task. After a number of attempts he finally succeeded, but not until he had caused no small amount of excitement and attention of the crowd. His final escape was made through the aid of another man who stopped and held a little conversation with his pursuer.

To all probability the young lady who was "stumped" had learned her lesson at the expense of her friend without taking a walk.

If you want to buy a horse, If you have a house to let, If you want boarders, If you want a servant, If you want a situation,

Object Lessons in Thrift and Economy.

The wandering scribe of the Lewiston Sunday Leader has this to say regarding a former citizen of this county:—

"Just previous to penning these lines I saw another old-timer, so I can't force speaking of him, the one-time financial manager of the Lewiston Journal—William A. Pidgin. The man, in my opinion, who, by close financial management, was a tower of strength in that paper's counting room and contributed largely to its success. Oh, yes, a very close calculator when it came to figures and the doling out of dollars.

"I can remember, when a boy, we used to visit the counting room of the Journal to procure the blank paper for use in school. The sheets were very thin and Brother Pidgin's terms of sale were six sheets for a penny. Very carefully would he count them out, and if he thought an error in number had been made a recount was necessary. If there was found even one sheet too many, back of the counter it went to the general supply."

"Well, we boys used to think that Brother Pidgin was pretty stingy, to say the least. But today I think differently for I sincerely believe that the good man only thought to teach us thrift. Thrift, that's the word, and a mighty good word it is. Take care of the pennies, and the dimes will take care of themselves, and all that sort of thing.

"And counting the sheets taught us thrift, and how to save and become rich. If I had more money, and didn't think it would cause the monotony operator to grow faint, I would give a list of the boys and girls who profited by Brother Pidgin's lessons and are now living on Easy Street. However, I will say that on account of the old gentleman's wisdom his teaching thrift so persistently, is the chief reason why my name is in 'Whos' Who in America,' among the other financially strong men."

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR STOMACH

If It's Upset Mi-o-na Puts It Right and Ends Distress or Nothing to Pay.

If you are one of the thousands who cannot eat a simple meal without its lying in the stomach like lead, fermenting and causing painful distress, sourness and gas, do not delay but go at once to your druggist and get some Mi-o-na—a simple prescription especially prepared to quickly and effectively end indigestion or dyspepsia and correct bad stomachs.

You must not allow your upset stomach to go from bad to worse for there will surely be longer periods of food fermentation causing greater agony, more gas, sick headache, unrefreshing sleep, "blue spells" and nervousness.

A few Mi-o-na tablets are just what you need—always keep them handy—they are small, pleasant to take, and absolutely harmless. Use Mi-o-na freely at the first sign of distress. It not only quickly ends the misery but helps to mold the liver, cleanse and strengthen the stomach so it can digest your food in the natural way, then you are well, hale and hearty.

"Story of My Mother's Looking Glass."

By Mrs. Sarah Bates Bartlett.

"If any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like a man building his house upon a sand, and straightaway the flood will come, and will overthrow him, and will bring down his house, and will make it a ruin."—Matthew 7:26-27.

I should like to offer a few particulars of my own history. During the course of a long life I have had much leisure, and a chance to notice much that passed before me; for I was of a reflecting cast. My earliest memory is of a shop, where I remained for some time, leaning with my face to the wall. I had no chance to feel lonely there, for there was passing all the time, for it was a fine city place.

The period of which I am speaking was upwards of a hundred years ago, and even then in my old fashioned dress I seemed to excite a great deal of attention, for they often turned and gave me a friendly glance, as they passed, especially the young, the gay and the handsome; the old lady, the shabby and the wretched seldom took any notice of me. At times I will own I indulged in a few vain thoughts, and perhaps I am not the only one who has formed mistaken ideas of the attentions received in society.

After a time I was taken down, packed in a big blue chest between two pillows, and carried sixty miles. My mistress unpacked me, and glad indeed I was for I was beginning to feel very flat there. I was hung up in the bedroom room, it might have been the living room, it has been so long I have almost forgotten, and here I hung year after year.

I will mention however that on Sunday my master and mistress would come and stand straight before me, he would want to straighten his Sunday stock, and she, dear one, would want to arrange her pretty brown hair a little, turning half around to the right, then to the left.

My mistress seemed to have business at home, visiting but very little, and very often I used to see her spinning late in the evening—Grandfather's clock often told me it was 12 o'clock, for it sat very near me. Sometimes an old pine knot would have to be added to the fire in the fireplace, for in those days there was no kerosene oil.

As the years passed, children began to come to gladden the home, and once I remember that twin girls were held up to me to see "how they looked." Often the children would play "Blind man's bluff" in the room and would get rather near to me, and my mistress would call out, "You are too near the glass." In a minute their hands would lower, and on would come along and taking the child by his two hands lead him away.

My mistress delighted to place flowers and asparagus around over the upper part of my head, and I enjoyed this for it kept me looking young, for I was growing old and "getting out of style."

At this period my mistress went about her work cheerfully, singing some tunes she loved, her voice was full, sweet and melodious as I can remember; but after some years of very hard work in this place she failed some in health, but seemed always full of courage.

At last I was again taken down and packed in the same blue chest, and carried sixty miles more. Arriving at my new home I was taken out and hung opposite the hall door at an angle of forty degrees, according to the fashion of those times. I was placed at the left of Grandfather's clock, and very near by, for I could see how the time was passing; and at the same time render my mistress the service I was intended to.

But you know looking glasses can only reflect, and in this instance it is well it is so, for much that is buried, that is heartrending can never be revealed. One instance I remember so well I think I relate it. My young mistress with pretty brown hair and eyes, I noticed one day, was placed on the table before me, very still and pale; soon they carried her out, and I never saw her again. She had a little lamb, and often would take it in her arms and stand before me, to get a better view of her friend, she loved so much. Then the songs my dear old mistress used to sing were hushed.

I never heard my mistress sing any more in this place, and it was sad indeed to reflect back to her grief so fully realized in the loss of her dear one, so suddenly removed from me. In a short time my master came along and took me down, and opened the old blue chest, and again placed me in there between the two pillows. It did not seem so strange to me for I had been there before. This time I was carried back to the same town, and very near the same place I was taken from before.

My old mistress came along, removed my soft covering, and they hung me over a little table, and there I hung for nearly twenty years, as nearly as I can remember.

My mistress seemed happy here, and as time passed I could hear her cheery song, though she worked very hard here. Finally a new mistress came but I was not disturbed. The old Grandfather's clock sat near me, and I could not see had her bed near by, so I could not see how the years passed so rapidly away. One by one they kept leaving me, my old master had been failing for some time, soon I suddenly missed him, and he came to visit me no more. Some twenty-five years passed, and then I saw no more of my old mistress, her busy life was ended, it only lacked two months of being eighty-nine years.

Then it was decided to sell the old place, and some things and move about carefully conveyed to a nice home and hung up in a very pleasant room. It was a pretty place, but I often found myself reflecting on the past scenes of my long life for I could not forget what manner of persons they were who had so often stood before me, it was with pleasure, always, and with a desire to look on their faces once more.

One very warm day my young master came in looking very ill. In a few days he was carried out and I never saw him again.

Then my young mistress decided to have an auction, the hay, farming tool, and horses were brought along to the sale, as they lead along the old family house, that had so faithfully carried them to meetings on the Sabbath, I saw my poor mistress pass into the parlor to find a place to weep alone.

Soon after I was taken down and was laid aside as useless, for I had had my day. Query? I may have done? Must the old be entirely cast aside? In all the years I had lived I had never used any deception.

Soon after the auction, my mistress was taken very ill, then they carried her

Pellagra.

If you would avoid having pellagra you must eat an abundance of beans, peas, milk, eggs and lean meat. The United States public health service makes the foregoing statement. It is well known that pellagra is a disease which has been prevalent among the peasantry of certain European countries. It has been ascribed to the eating of maize which has been affected by a fungus growth. Of late that theory has been challenged, and there is considerable difference of opinion as to the origin of the disease which is an affection of the skin and is often fatal.

In recent years, there have been a considerable number of cases of pellagra in the southern United States. The health authorities while not agreed as to the cause, have demonstrated that pellagra, like scurvy, can be prevented and cured by an abundance of food of a proper character. Consequently the health authorities are recommending that farmers in the south cultivate beans and peas and raise dairy cattle instead of devoting all their energies to cotton raising at a time when the European war has upset the cotton markets.

The prompt attention that has been given to this disease in this country and the discovery of means of prevention, probably means that here, at any rate, it will soon be as rare as any case of scurvy, a disease that was once regarded as almost a necessary evil among seafaring folk.

A Factory on the Farm.

A silo is a factory on the farm and therefore lends itself to co-operation of the commercial and agricultural interests. The farmer gets the profit of both producer and consumer.

We need more of these twin agencies of prosperity on the farms of Maine and Norway. In speaking to his friends of the business men cannot render a better service to their communities than in encouraging the building of silos. The silo is a great business educator. It arouses the spirit of enterprise, develops business acumen and awakens the joy of ownership.

A farmer can build a silo for two or three hundred dollars, and it will, under ordinary conditions, pay a dividend of 40 per cent, where it is run to capacity.

Inventing the Sleeping Car. Inhabitants of Central City, Colo., will tell you that George Pullman got his idea of his sleeping car from the little cabin he occupied in the steam pump mill he owned and run in Rusel Gulch, where he was a pioneer at that place in the early sixty years.

The cabin had its sleeping quarters in the form of bunks along the wall to leave more space for the living room.

The History of the Dairy Cow in Maine.

Hon. Frank S. Adams, State Dairy Instructor, in an address on the History of the Dairy Cow in Maine, said as follows:

In prehistoric times the wild eticas were divided into two families by the natural environments. Those that inhabited the plains and vales, where the feed was good, were larger than those in the hills and mountains where the feed was scanty. Their function in life was to reproduce their kind in the offspring, giving enough milk for the calf until he was old enough to hustle for himself. No improvement year after year, a question physically of the survival of the fittest.

The cow played an important part in the history and development of this State. The cow of the past, once usually referred to as the native cow, was just the type of cow for the wants of those days. There were no markets for dairy products, or much of anything else. This pioneer cow was a cow which gave milk in the summer when in the pastures, so that the farmer's wife could make butter and milk to pack away for the long winter. This pioneer cow would drop a calf that could be raised for an ox to assist in clearing the land of stumps and rocks, so that it could be plowed and cultivated for the crops. And in the winter hauling wood and lumber to market, for about all the money these farmers had was what was received for the wood and lumber sold. This pioneer cow when her usefulness had passed, was slaughtered for food for the farmer; the hide was tanned and made into boots and shoes for the children to wear to school in the long winter months and even the horns were utilized for "powder horns" as they were called.

The old native cow played well her part in the early history and for quite a long period; up to the close of the Civil War. About this time inventive genius, which had been wasting most all its efficiency in inventing and constructing machines of destruction, was turned to the more peaceful occupation of inventing and constructing machinery to aid in production.

The one inventive genius had harnessed the water power, and manufacturing centers were growing and there commenced to be a market for dairy products. The only ground that seemed to be left by the western farmer for the farmer of Maine was dairying. The farmers of Maine at this time had some little knowledge of dairying. They began to realize that if this business was to be made profitable the old native cow must go and instead of trying to develop a dairy they did the wisest thing—imported from the countries where the husband had been working for centuries breeding and developing the best of the dairy type. The Jerseys were the first importations to this State. I speak in this lecture principally of the Jerseys because the Jerseys were the pioneers.

The Jerseys dairy cattle went into the hands of farmers who were not used to taking care of that kind of a cow. The old native cow, that they were familiar with, owing to her environments was as tough and hardy almost as a deer. Old barns, poor care and feed, in many instances going a long distance for a drink of ice water, and that once a day, so you can see that under these conditions the pioneer cow had a hard time, and the immediate result was a "reversion to type" a going back to the original common stock and it began to be the old native cow, long wintered because in a few years they saw a small under-sized animal with short teats and small udders.

The old farmer knew very little about the care and feeding of dairy stock, but many have learned that they are not pleased to say that we have now in Maine as good herds as can be found anywhere in this country and some of the great reasons why our dairymen are not successful are because they do not comply with right conditions.

Some men have a natural genius for care of cattle and will make a fair success without the technical training that the boys get here in the College of Agriculture in Maine. There is a technical training, but the benefits of a technical training are well illustrated in the Cow Test Associations in Maine. The official tester that had had this training not only assists the farmers in keeping records of production and cost of same, but he will tell you that they have been of great assistance in improving the stock and in many instances have been able to save much more than the cost of the association. You boys who are going to take dairying for your work are much better equipped for the work than men who have never had this training.

My advice to you young men who are going to take up dairying is to decide that you will some day have pure bred stock; do not always be contented with grade herd; never for day with scrubs. Then try and get the best material you can on the farm—peas, clover, etc., to sell to the cow as a machine to manufacture into the principal products—milk, cream and butter fat.

That there is a great opportunity for dairying in Maine is self-evident. Milk and cream must always be produced near the consumer. The State of Maine is within twenty-four hours of the best market in the world.

The State of Maine is a natural dairy state, producing many different varieties of grasses, good water and this combination makes a product of the finest quality.

Postal Savings Increase.

The war in Europe is proving a big boon to the postal savings in this country. From the very day hostilities opened across the seas postal savings receipts began to increase by leaps and bounds and withdrawals fell off, a result quite contrary to the predictions. Two important results have followed; thousands of people, largely of foreign birth, accustomed to send their savings abroad, are now patrons of our postal savings system; and enormous sums of actual cash have been released for commercial uses among our own people at a time when the need for every available dollar is pressing.

On July 1, when affairs were running smoothly here and abroad and the transmission of money across the Atlantic was safe and expeditious, there was approximately $48,000,000 of postal savings standing to the credit of about 385,000 depositors. Since then over $10,000,000 of deposits have been added and the number of depositors has increased enormously. This unprecedented gain in the postal savings when it is considered that the gain in the last three months is larger than the gain for the entire fiscal year 1914.

Crowding of Furniture to Be Avoided.

When furnishing a new home there is often a tendency to purchase too much furniture at first, to have everything complete when one settles; but in doing that it is found later that this leads to crowding, for as the weeks and months pass other pieces are found to be needed and some of the original purchases could have been omitted.

Crowding is one of the greatest barriers to an artistic home. However beautiful the furniture may be, much of the attractiveness is lost if the room is cluttered, and as one necessary piece after another is added after the house is supposed to be furnished, it is not long before there is a cluttered look which detracts greatly from the artistic appearance desired.

The first requisite for attractive furnishings is a cozy, homelike look without which no house will have a comfortable, inviting appearance. Arrangement of the furniture has much to do with producing this comfort and attractiveness. Primness in placing the furniture is never conducive to a cozy-looking room, as illustrated by the parlors of former days.

One recalls the old-fashioned high organ or melodeon placed straight against the wall; the chairs, each side of it just as straight and prim, and only far enough from the wall to prevent marring the plastering; the marble top center table placed squarely in the middle of the room under the hanging lamp. From the walls there looked down on all the primness and formality or arrangement the family portraits surrounded by heavy gilt frames; and a which was draped a silk scarf. This room, which was carefully swept and dusted, was always ready for company and it was seldom ever used except on such special occasions. With all this stiffness and grandeur, there was no room for coziness or comfort.

A chair placed invitingly near the table and others drawn away from the wall with something of get-together air, as if occupants had just left them after a pleasant conversation, will do much toward producing the desired coziness. What if a book is found open upon the table, with the reader left it. Surely it would radiate an air of comfort and enjoyment that would be a pleasure to one coming into the room.

Every article that is placed in the room should be carefully considered, that one may be sure that it harmonizes well with everything else in the room. If one is not a good judge of artistic furnishings, there are experts who may be employed; but care should be taken that the mistress of the house has sufficient voice in the subject that there may be something of her own individuality reflected.

"To Reform Him"

Never marry a man to reform him. If a young fellow will not give up some or other bad habit for the sake of the girl he loves, at a time when he is as yet uncertain of making her his own, he will most certainly not put restraint upon himself when he is married.

Do not believe what a man says about straightening up after marriage. A man worth his salt will not ask a woman to marry him as long as he feels himself the victim of some besetting weakness.

Garnishes for Meats and Fish.

The articles most frequently used as garnishes are as follows:

Parsley and celery tops for cold meat, poultry and fish, and for chops, cutlets, steaks and salads. Parsley is also used for roasts and parsley or curled lettuce for scalloped oysters.

Lemon is almost a universal garnish. The same can be said of parsley. Slices of lemon cut very thin for sardines, raw oysters, boiled fowl, turkey, fish, roast veal, steaks, salads.

Sheep sorrel may be used in place of lemon and is exceedingly pretty. Watercresses may be used for mock duck.

Garden fennel for salmon or mackerel. Capers for salads.

Current jelly for game, cold tongue, etc.

(Gherkins or large pickles, cut crosswise, for cold corned beef sliced.

Cold hard-boiled eggs, sliced, for cold ham, cut in thin slices.

Link sausage for roast turkey, put around the edge of platter.

Boiled carrot, sliced for boiled beef. Beets peeled and sliced, for cold meat, boiled beef and salt fish.

Potato croquettes or Saratoga potatoes may be used with a roast or sirloin of beef.

Boiled rice is used on the platter around a boiled leg of mutton, and boiled rice in balls, dotted with bright jelly, has a pretty effect around a plate of cold meat.

Anchovies may be used as a garnish for cold meats and anchovies on toast furnish a nice relish.

Smulax wreathed over and about a dish of fruit is extremely pleasing to the eye.

Farm Facts.

Farming is as old as the human race and is yet in its infancy.

Success is bound to come to the farmer who plans while he plows.

No civilization has ever advanced beyond its agricultural development.

No farmer is successful who thinks more of his barn than he does of his home.

The most beautiful fact in the farmer's work is that everything he plants is a lesson of faith.

The best farmer does not bother about getting ahead of his neighbor; his great business is to get ahead of himself.

Uniform laws for the standardization of grades of New England apples will be sought in the six New England states as one result of a conference of producers, distributors and storage people from all over New England at the Boston Chamber of Commerce. One of the reasons given for the poor apple market this season is the attempt of the grower to dispose of his entire crop without regard for grade.

The possible buyer of New England apples consequently never knows what grade he is going to get and purchase the graded Western apples. Another matter discussed at the conference was the question of advertising apples by the Fruit Growers' Association in New England.

Special committees of practical men are to be appointed to further both projects. [Laconia Democrat]

NORTH BRIDGTON.

Mrs. Ruth Ingalls Buck.
It is with sadness we note the death of Mrs. Ruth Ingalls Buck of Harrison, who passed on to the higher life, Oct. 5th; she was 91 years and six months old Oct. 4. A friend in speaking of her said, "Surely a 'Mother in Israel' has gone to her reward. If I could feel that when I pass over I shall have accomplished one half as she has I would be satisfied."

She was, as one expressed it, "a neighborhood blessing" in sickness or trouble. Anyone who came to her, and there were many, received help and sympathy, truly a good woman has gone.

"It is easy to use and quick to respond. No work. Just apply. It penetrates without rubbing."

Read What Others Say:

"Have used your Liniment very successfully in a case of rheumatism; and always have a bottle on hand in case of a cold or sore throat. I wish to say I think it one of the best of household remedies. I would not have used it only it was recommended to me by a friend of mine who, I wish to say, is one of the best boosters for your Liniment I ever saw."—J. W. Fuller, Denver, Col.

"Just a line in praise of Sloan's Liniment. I have been ill nearly fourteen weeks with rheumatism; have been treated by doctors who did their best. I had not slept for the terrible pain for several nights; when my wife got me a small bottle of the Liniment and three applications gave me relief so that I could sleep."—Joseph Tandon, 612 Converse Street, McKeesport, Pa.

Wonderful for pastry, too, and just as good for biscuits, hot rolls and bread.

Your grocer will have it. Good grocers like to sell William Tell Flour

Cream of Tartar

Many New England people use cream of tartar for quick baking. They value its superior qualities and will not knowingly accept substitutes made of alum or lime phosphates, such as are sometimes offered.

But even the most careful cannot always know. The high price of cream of tartar has led to efforts to substitute alum and phosphate of lime compounds which are vastly inferior and not as healthful to use.

The easiest way in which the housekeeper can be sure of quality and economy is by using Royal Baking Powder, which is made from pure cream of tartar.

Royal Baking Powder gives perfect results, is less trouble to use, and has not been advanced in price.

Anyone who has once become accustomed to using Royal Baking Powder never reverts to home-made mixtures or any other product for raising biscuit, griddle-cakes, doughnuts, or cake.

Bear Mountain Grange.

Bear Mountain Grange in its 41st year shows little sign of age or retirement from the wide community of Maine Patrons. Since the present year's campaign started under the inspiring orders of a new Field Marshal, seconded by a gallant staff of lieutenants, nearly all bright and resourceful Sisters, a determined crusade for recruits to the ranks of Grange No. 62, has resulted in attracting to its membership a large number of the finest young men and maidens of the district, representing the best elements of our civil life and assuring a continuance of vital prosperity in coming years.

It is remembered that in some past years a new application was sometimes so rare an occurrence as to be almost startling, but this year the omission to file one or more applications at each meeting of the Grange is a rare event. So that the omission of fifteen stalwart men and women and blooming youths on October 17, to full degree membership was one of the happiest events of current record.

At the last meeting, Oct. 31, an accession of five new candidates to the first and second degrees was witnessed by an audience of nearly one hundred.

The evening's entertainment was under the direction of Sister Jennie Haynes, who presented the following program:

Musical
Kimball's Orchestra—Violin, E. Prentiss Kimball; Winter music, Lillian Kimball; piano accompanist, Lillian Kimball. Scenes in military and dressmaking rooms. Mrs. Alice E. The entertainment concluded with a social dance with music by Kimball's Orchestra.

A bolt came out of the steering gear of the Brown truck and became unmanageable and went off the bank by the Wheeler brook and tipped over. The driver, Walter Brown, escaped with only a lame back but it surely was a miracle that he was not killed. Men with pulley blocks got it right side up so it is on the road again.

The Circle was entertained at the vestry Tuesday evening by Mrs. Carrie Hersey and Mrs. Annie Haselton. The Cradle Roll was invited at three o'clock, and supper was served at five for them and their mothers. The regular supper was served at 6:30 to a very good attendance.

NORWAY AND VICINITY.

Norway's New Physician.

Dr. Harold Musgrave Allen of Boston has bought the practice and good will of Dr. F. N. Barker, and will come to Norway in about ten days to continue the practice in Dr. Barker's house office as successor to Dr. Barker.

Dr. Barker was obliged to make this change in his business because of illness.

Dr. H. P. Jones spent the day Tuesday on business in Portland.

Next Thursday, Nov. 19th, completes 40 years of continued service of H. D. Smith, as cashier of the Norway National Bank. No person who was then in business is in the same business now.
